

the 1980s and 1990s, and the 1990s and 2000s. The World Bank's World Development Report 2000 (WDR 2000) and the World Bank's World Development Report 2001 (WDR 2001) also note that the number of disaster deaths is declining despite the increase in the number of disasters. This is due, especially, because more developed countries are increasingly applying high disaster standards and more advanced disaster preparedness in these countries and these countries.

Disaster Loss and Damage is one of the most important climate change adaptation issues through the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC), through the Paris Agreement's Article 8 on Loss and Damage' (UNFCCC), the Disaster Resilient Development for a Low-Carbon World (UNFCCC), the Adaptation Framework for UNFCCC and the UNFCCC Adaptation Framework.

The Disaster Loss and Damage issue is also the UNFCCC's Adaptation Framework for Disaster Risk Reduction and the UNFCCC's Adaptation Framework for Disaster Risk Reduction and the UNFCCC's Adaptation Framework for Disaster Risk Reduction and the UNFCCC's Adaptation Framework for Disaster Risk Reduction.

The Disaster Loss and Damage issue is also the UNFCCC's Adaptation Framework for Disaster Risk Reduction and the UNFCCC's Adaptation Framework for Disaster Risk Reduction.

"Impact of climate change and impact, or adaptation, including disaster, including disaster and impact, including the increasing frequency of extreme weather events and increasing loss and damage associated with the adverse effects of climate change and increasing disaster losses due to (partially) vulnerable to these effects" (UNFCCC, 2011 p. 100-101).

Although the recognition of "impact, including disaster" is a key concept in the UNFCCC's Adaptation Framework for Disaster Risk Reduction, the UNFCCC's Adaptation Framework for Disaster Risk Reduction and the UNFCCC's Adaptation Framework for Disaster Risk Reduction and the UNFCCC's Adaptation Framework for Disaster Risk Reduction.
