Background:

The University of Illinois at Chicago (UIC) is a leading research institution in the field of public health. The Center for Health Systems Research and Education (CHSRE) is a key component of UIC's commitment to advancing the science of public health. CHSRE is a multidisciplinary center that brings together experts from various disciplines to address the complex challenges of public health. The center's research focuses on the social, behavioral, and environmental determinants of health, and the role of health systems in promoting health and preventing disease. CHSRE is also committed to community engagement and health equity, and works to address the needs of underserved populations.
