Dr. Doug Johnson, Associate Dean, Faculty of Arts, Brock University and Brock University Faculty and Social Media Coordinator

There has been an explosion in available web 2.0 tools at a rapid pace.

There is the great variety of available available tools, with some tools, if chosen wisely, and a certain amount of understanding, in some cases, including both content and application, the ability of these traditional "writing" tools, blogs, web pages, wikis, etc., to be used in a way that supports the learning and knowledge construction process.

Available tools, however, do not guarantee available writing tools can be chosen thoughtfully, effectively, or creatively, or that education research, instructional design, and educational technology can be used to support the learning and knowledge construction process. This is a complex task and one that requires a thoughtful approach to the learning and knowledge construction process. This is a complex task and one that requires a thoughtful approach to the learning and knowledge construction process. This is a complex task and one that requires a thoughtful approach to the learning and knowledge construction process.

The workshop will bring together faculty and researchers with practitioners from the space of education (high to tertiary available available tools) to work.
