

What is a Country Report?

Country Reports are a set of reports on the global health needs of each WHO country to be used to inform global health priorities. See frequently asked information: What are country reports? What is the purpose of a country report?

Who can lead a Country Report?

The WHO Regional Director (RD) or Country Health Representative (CHR) is responsible for a country report. See frequently asked information: What is the role of the WHO Regional Director? What is the role of the WHO Country Health Representative?

Can I lead a Country Report if I am not a Regional Director?

Yes. Being a Regional Director is not a prerequisite for leading a country report. See frequently asked information: What is the role of the WHO Country Health Representative?

Who can lead a Country Report?

Experiences from Government Organizations (GOs), Non-governmental Organizations (NGOs), and academia have shown that country reports can be led by individuals from education, health, business, government agencies and ministries. Visit the list of country reports: What are country reports? What is the purpose of a country report? What is the role of the WHO Country Health Representative?

How is a country report developed?

Leading a country report follows an 8-step process to ensure a country report is developed in the country of need. Visit the list of frequently asked information: What are country reports? What is the purpose of a country report? What is the role of the WHO Country Health Representative?

How many reports are you lead in a country?

One per country/region.

Is the table above 'International Development Policy for Sustainable Health' (IPSH) or 'WHO's 10 priority diseases'?

Yes. The table is a compilation of more WHO Country Reports. Visit the list of frequently asked information: What are country reports? What is the purpose of a country report? What is the role of the WHO Country Health Representative?

Regional Director

What is the role of a Regional Director?

A Regional Director (RD) is a senior WHO official responsible for overseeing WHO's activities in a region. Visit the list of frequently asked information: What is the role of the WHO Regional Director?